ABSTRACT

BIOGRAPHY OR HISTORY

From the Searching for San Diego booklet:

*"In Searching for San Diego we are undertaking a journey through five neighborhoods of San Diego: Emerald Hills, the Gaslamp Quarter, La Jolla, Linda Vista, and Sherman Heights. But this is not just a tour through different neighborhoods of this city, it is a voyage through time and thought as well. Interviews were conducted by people from this year's five neighborhoods to provide a firsthand look at different experiences of living in this city. These interviews are not only the basis of this journal, and the core of the Neighborhood Days, but they represent the foundation upon which San Diego's livelihood is based...its people. This journal provides you with one of the keys to this journey, offering insight into what your neighbors think and how their thoughts relate to writers and thinkers of different times and places. We may appear separated by canyons, freeways, languages, and other visible and invisible borders. But we are all part of the community of San Diego, and it is our responsibility to respect and nourish the people and land of this place. The California Council for the Humanities hopes that you enjoy "seeking what is unfound" in Searching for San Diego."*
